

Disco Ball

I imagine humanity as one big disco ball. The difference between humanity and a disco ball is how it's lit. The disco ball we call humanity is lit from the inside by an eternal, unconditionally loving, omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient force we call God.

We are the glass fragments that make up the ball, yet we are one ball, it just depends how you look at it. As seen through the eyes of Oneness, there are no individual fragments. All fragments are equal. No fragments are better or more important than the other and each fragment is needed for the ball to be whole.

Each fragment appears to have boundaries. These boundaries are a necessity as they provide a means of self identity for the individual fragment. At the same time, each fragment is holographic and it can reflect the pattern of the entire ball. You can come to know the entire ball as God by invoking a willingness to see the God light shine through any fragment.

Each fragment has responsibilities and functions and the two are related. On the responsibility side, the fragment is responsible for how much light will shine through it. The fragment enters into some sort of discipline that clears it of all the elements within it that interfere with the God light shining through. That is the process of enlightenment. This process is an individual responsibility; no other fragment can clear another fragment's obstructions. Yet it can through the process of forgiveness create conditions that allow other fragments to clear themselves much more easily.

The other responsibility is to love, care for and forgive the other fragments, especially those most closely connected to it. In this way the integrity of the ball is kept up throughout the ball. This caring for the other fragments serves a few purposes.

One purpose is that it strengthens the integrity of the ball when any fragment is strengthened. Another is that helping another fragment is a way of clearing the obstruction from the fragment that is doing the helping. The fragments do not always appreciate how valuable this helping or serving the other fragments is as part of the obstruction clearing process for the fragment that serves.

It is much easier for a fragment to clear its own obstructions by serving other fragments. A fragment that isolates itself and only looks within cuts itself off from a powerful tool for clearing its own obstructions.

On the function side, the fragments have a process called mirroring. Their function is to mirror back those flaws within the other fragments that the other fragments are not in a position to realize. They only see the other fragment's flaws but not their own until they consciously choose to enter into a discipline and hence become a Disciple.

The fragments that enter a discipline allow the God light to shine through them more clearly. This light is then more easily perceived by the other fragments and acts to inspire the other fragments to enter or continue with their chosen discipline (especially when the tests become tougher).

It is through entering this discipline that the fragments realize that the flaws that they saw in the other fragments were only a reflection of their own flaws. This is the process of Self realization. It seems to me that committing to entering into a process of forgiveness is what begins the process of allowing the fragments to see themselves mirrored back by the other fragments.

It is also through invoking this forgiveness process that the fragment removes its own obstructions. As more and more fragments enter this process of service and forgiveness, the entire ball gets brighter and brighter and eventually a critical mass is reached which benefits everyone on the ball.

That is planetary ascension and that what best serves the ball.